

Grau & Angulo

There is no stopping Grau & Angulo, which is currently making great strides in the IP marketplace. As sources note, "its rate of growth has been really extraordinary - it's one of the best boutique firms right now." Part of this expansion may be attributed to heavily escalated activity in the field of electronics and software patents, now a major portion of the firm's workload; currently, for example, the team is advising Sony on a range of IP rights enforcement matters. Other noteworthy cases include representing Schindler in a patent case brought against lift manufacturer Otis, and co-ordinating trade mark enforcement work for Philip Morris in Latin America, Canada and Portugal. The group's talent for handling piracy and counterfeiting cases is highlighted as another key strength, along with its impressive degree of technical and business knowledge. Alejandro Angulo's work has a focus on trade mark and patent litigation. As one interviewee stated: "He's one of the most hard-working lawyers I've ever worked with - he has a fantastic knowledge of IP and general Spanish law, really understands business and is just a joy to work with." Jorge Grau is declared the firm's most gifted litigator. He has a particular focus on trade marks and unfair competition, and sources revere his technical know-how and capacity to resolve highly complex matters. Javier Huarte is also active on pharmaceutical patent work, and draws commendations for his extremely comprehensive knowledge base, which hugely benefits the overall diversity of his practice. Having been made partner in 2008, Sonia Santos is quickly and successfully establishing a strong presence in the IP arena. A loyal client base and excellent feedback all point to a bright future for her.
